ELUCIDATION
OF THE LAW OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDONESIA
NUMBER 21 YEAR 2007
ON
THE ERADICATION OF THE CRIMINAL ACT OF TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS

I. GENERAL

Trafficking in persons is a modern day form of slavery. Trafficking in persons is also one of the grossest violations of human respect and dignity.

The increase of instances of trafficking in persons in various countries, including Indonesia and other developing nations, has become the focus of attention of Indonesia as a nation, the international community, and members of international organizations, especially the United Nations (UN).

Based on empirical evidence, women and children constitute groups that are most likely to fall victim to the criminal act of trafficking in persons. Victims are trafficked not only to be prostituted or other forms of sexual exploitations, but also for various other reasons such as forced labor or servitude, slavery, or practices similar to slavery. Traffickers engage in the recruitment, transport, transfer, harboring, or receipt of persons with the aim to entrap, force, or take advantage of such person into exploitative practices under threat of force, use of force, abduction, fraud, deception, misuse of authority or position of vulnerability, or the giving of payment or benefit for the purpose of obtaining consent from the person having control over the victim.

Forms of exploitation which include forced labor or servitude, slavery, and practices similar to slavery, forced labor or servitude are work conditions which arise through methods, plans or schemes designed to convince a person that if he/she fails to perform a certain kind of work, such person or a person under their care will suffer either physically or psychologically. Slavery is a condition where a person is under the ownership of another person. Practices similar to slavery are actions which place a person under the control of another person causing the former to be unable to refuse an unlawful profession ordered by the latter, despite the former having no wish to perform such work.

The criminal act of trafficking in persons, especially against women and children, has become widespread in the form of both organized and non-organized crime networks. The criminal act of trafficking in persons has even gone so far as to involve not only individual persons but also corporate entities and state officials who abuse their authority and power. Networks of traffickers also have an operational reach not only encompassing regions within a state's boundaries but also crossing state borders.

Provisions on prohibition of trafficking in persons are basically set out in the Indonesian Penal Code (KUHP). Article 297 of the Penal Code sets forth a prohibition against the trafficking in females and underage males and qualifies such action as a criminal offence. Article 83 of Law No. 23 of 2002 on Child Protection prohibits the trading, sale, or abduction of children for personal benefit or to be sold. However, provisions in the Penal Code and Child Protection Law do not provide a clear legal definition of trafficking in persons. In addition, Article 297 of the Penal Code imposes a very light punishment that is disproportionate with the suffering inflicted on the victims of trafficking. As such, a special law on the criminal act of trafficking in persons is required which is able to provide a material and formal legal basis. To that end, this special law should anticipate and cover all types of actions, means, or forms of exploitations which may occur in the criminal act of trafficking in persons, whether perpetrated among regions inside the border or across state boundaries, by individual offenders as well as corporate entities.

This Law regulates the protection of witnesses and victims as an important aspect in law enforcement, aimed at giving basic protection to witnesses and victims. Additionally, this Law also gives considerable attention to the suffering of victims as a result of the criminal act of trafficking in persons, manifested in the right to restitution that are required to be paid by the offender as compensation to the victim, and also provides the rights of victims to medical and social rehabilitation, return assistance and reintegration that must be fulfilled by the state, especially for victims who have undergone physical, psychological, and social hardship as a result of the crime.

The prevention and handling of the criminal act of trafficking in persons is the responsibility of the National Government, Regional Governments, the community, and families. In order to formulate comprehensive and integrated steps to prevent and mitigate the crime, task forces need to be created. The criminal act of trafficking in persons is a crime that occurs not only within the boundaries of a state but also crosses borders. As such, international cooperation needs to be developed in the form of bilateral assistance agreements in the area of crime and/or other technical cooperation in accordance with the prevailing laws.

The formulation of this Law also constitutes a manifestation of Indonesia's commitment to observe the UN protocol of 2000 on the Prevention, Suppress and Punishment of Trafficking in Persons, especially Women and Children (the Palermo Protocol), to which Indonesia is a signatory.
